

PR for a worldwide Environment Project
Washington, DC
US045

We are a nonprofit organization in Washington DC and want to use the power of wildlife imagery to promote an appreciation and understanding of nature. We believe a public unaware of the world's rich biodiversity cannot be motivated to protect our natural world. To achieve this mission we are spearheading U.S. efforts in support of a unique collection of thousands of videos, images and fact-files illustrating the world's threatened species.

We continue to work with the best natural history filmmakers and photographers in the business, alongside key environmental organizations, leading academic institutions and individual scientists. We also work in partnership with organizations across the globe to raise the profile of our work.

We would be open to accepting an internship who has the following skills / interests:

- Exceptional writing, editing and communication skills
- General knowledge and enthusiasm for conservation, the environment, and nature photography/films
- Experience in education, with experience in environmental education a plus
- High proficiency in the Microsoft Office Suite, and some Adobe CS4 or video editing experience a plus
- Proven ability to multitask, plan and meet deadlines under time constraints, and work independently and collaboratively
- Outstanding attention to detail
- Ability to act on own initiative, but also to know when to seek advice
- A sense of humor is a must!
